

Title: Data Science Post-Doctoral Fellow

General Overview

Dr. James Pawelski at the University of Pennsylvania, in collaboration with Dr. Louis Tay at Purdue University, seeks a Data Science Post-Doctoral Fellow to join in an exciting new project “The Humanities and Human Flourishing: A Multi-Disciplinary Collaboration for Understanding, Assessing, and Cultivating Well-Being”. This project was invited by, and is pending sponsorship from, the Templeton Religion Trust. The aim is to identify and assess the mechanisms through which the humanities influence physical, psychological, and normative aspects of human flourishing through both qualitative and quantitative methods.

This work will require a Post-Doctoral Fellow with expertise in data mining, text and language analysis, and data visualization to develop new modes and methods of assessing well-being. This will include the use of innovative mobile technologies (e.g., www.expimetrics.com), wearable technologies and daily health data, and social media data. Results will be published in a variety of psychology, humanities, computer science, and research methods venues.

This will be a one-year position starting on August 1, 2017, with funding for subsequent years to be awarded based on performance. The individual will be appointed as a Post-Doctoral Fellow at the University of Pennsylvania, and will work closely with the World Well-Being project (www.wwbp.org) at Penn’s Positive Psychology Center.

Key Responsibilities and Tasks:

- Developing new measures and methods for gathering well-being data streams
- Collaborating with digital humanities researchers
- First-authoring publications for top-tier peer-reviewed publications
